Excerpt: . . . of Mar, one of the Secretaries of State, announced the intention of government to take charge of the prosecution, by which it fell to the ground. The printer and publisher were soon released; and the Treasurer, who behaved with his usual cunning, whilst he disclaimed any knowledge of the pamphlet, and joined in its condemnation, forwarded a hundred pounds to Swift for STEELE EXPELLED THE COMMONS. 349 the service of the former, with a promise of further aid. In consequence of an address from the Lords, the queen offered a reward of 300. for the discovery of the author, but this was all grimace; for he was well enough known to the ministers, who entertained him daily, and approved of his performance. The writer of the Crisis, however, did not escape so well. Steele had been returned to parliament for the borough of Stockbridge, and, as he was likely to become troublesome to the ministers, it was resolved to get rid of him by a petition against his return. But as this would have taken up some time, a more compendious method was resorted to, by a complaint to the House against three of his publications, as tending to sedition, and highly reflecting upon the administration and government. These were the Crisis, and two numbers of the Englishman. The subject was brought forward upon the 12th of March, and adjourned to the 18th, when Steele, having acknowledged the works, made an able defence, which...
