This bit of news pleased and comforted Mr. Ellis greatly. The salary was considerable, and it meant that his son would have a fixed sum to depend upon for four years at least, if he were elected. Well, if you will go in for that kind of life, I suppose an Attorney-generalship would make it really possible. And of course the office would help your general practice of law. It would make everything right for me, replied Verney. The salarys about eight thousand a year, I believe, and with that amount assured, I dont think Id have to give up my District after all, at least not for four years. Perhaps, but oh, my son! If I only had the money I once had it would be so different for you! You could climb as high as you like! Oh, I ll get high enough! Dont you care, father. Hows this light Just right, thank you. I think I shall sleep now, returned his father from the bed. Then good-night, said Verney. Good-night, said Mr. Ellis, and then, just as the young man was closing the door, Oh, Verney! Verney in reply, hand on door-knob, patiently: Yes, sir Mr. Ellis, irrelevantly: What was that toast you gave when we were having our whiskey What toast Oh, with sudden recollection, you mean to celibacy Yes, what made you say that Oh, I dont know, with a forced laugh. Only that Im too...
