The grand event was a banquet given in the Bourse, and at which 1, 568 covers were laid. The scene was an unusual and inspiring one. The number of guests made it one of the largest, if not the largest, banquet ever given in this country. The srreat hall of the Bourse was elaborately decorated with palms, xerns ami other plants. The gallery was festooned with the colors and flags of all nations, with standards of flags at every available point. Upon the arrival j and f President McKinley a grand spectacle was seen. The distinguished guest was greeted with rounds of applause, the waving of handkerchiefs and the music of a military band, while hundreds of women in evening dress looked down from the gallery upon one of the most remarkable occasions of our times. , At the main...
