Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: .Idealism, as well as will power, characterize the members of the present generation of Hardings. In Corsica, Ohio, live Loren Harding, left, and Amos Harding, cousins of the Presidential nominee broom-maker, a fire insurance agent, a typesetter, a musician and a law student. He was as expert with his hands as he was eager in his mind. His constant desire was not merely to see or to hear some new thing, but also to do it. And while still in school he experienced the rapture and anguish of an ardent love. When Warren was under nineteen he had some differences with his partner in insurance and went to Chicago (his first visit) to see his uncle, Mr. A. J. Harding, western manager of The Springfield Fire and Marine Insurance Company, with the hope of retaining the local agency of that company. He was taken to his uncle s home and treated so kindly that next day he tried to show appreciation by inviting his young cousin to lunch at a restaurant. Those were the days when the Palmer House was furnishing a room and four meals of delicious food for three dollars. The appetite of the boys was 100 per cent efficient and there was nothing mean about the host. He was appalled at the discovery that the waiter s check exhausted his only five-dollar bill, but never lost his nerve. Being too proud, of course, to borrow from his guest, after their parting he walked...
